A DAY IN SRI SURYA PAHAR

It was around 9 a.m. in the morning and we were already late for our trip. The weather was fine but we could see some amount of clouds in the sky. The B.Com 3rd semester students of Pandit Deendayal Uppadhaya Adarsha Mahavidyalay, Tulungia gathered at the college campus in full uniform, anxious and excited at the same time. I was accompanying my colleague, Dr. Pranjal Morang, who was leading the students on an educational tour on Environmental Studies. The bus arrived in time and we made sure that everybody boarded the bus comfortably and all the necessary provisions were taken for the trip. It took us almost two and a half hour to reach our destination – Sri

Sri Surya Pahar, a hilly terrain situated in the southeast of Goalpara, is an important heritage site in Assam and is believed to be associated with sun worship. It is a captivating place and attracts thousands of visitors every year. The most significant thing about the site is that it was once a major confluence of three important religions- Hinduism, Buddhism and Jainism. The hill can be regarded as a stone house of countless ancient remains associated with the three religions. We could see several rock-cut Shiva Lingas. One of the priests elaborated the myth associated with the place. It is believed that Vyasa asked Bishwakarma to make one lakh Shiva Lingas on this hill so that a second Kashi could be created in this part of earth. However, due to some reason Bishwakarma ended up making one Linga less than the required number. Although, no historical evidence exists to support the theory or to know the number of Lingas that once covered the hill. But hundreds of such Lingas of various sizes could be found scattered at the site. Another attraction is the Akashi Ganga. It is a small water body in the place located under a mysterious rock. The rock is placed in such a manner that not even a drop of rain can fall and mix with the water of Akashi Ganga. It is popularly held that the water is holy and has medicinal properties. Apart from that, there are many stupas and the site is also filled with many ancient rock carvings belonging to the three religions.

Both tourists and pilgrims flock to this important historical and religious place. But also, the archaeological ruins and relics of the ancient era equally attract many researchers and academicians. The objective of our trip was educational. However, we aimed to study the area from environmental perspective and not historical or religious. The aim was to provide the students with an opportunity to explore the bio-diversity and the ecosystem of the important site. By the time we reached the site it started to drizzle and we had our breakfast inside the bus. I was happy to see the students take the initiative of collecting all the wastes in disposable bags to carry back instead of throwing it out in the open and litter the place. As the tour of the area began the students were made into three groups and assigned different themes for study. One group was asked to explore and study the water body ecosystem while another studied the ecosystem of the hills. The third group was to make observations on the rocks found on the territory. There were many small to big plants and trees having economic as well medicinal values. We also saw monkeys and various birds in our visit. The hill with its beautiful landscapes can easily enchant anyone. It was an enriching learning experience for the kids and they had a wonderful time at the place.

Of course it was an educational tour and, unlike other tourists, we could not stay there longer as we had to hurry back to college to reach in time. But we learned a lot from our experience and had fun together. The students showed great maturity and discipline and their cooperation made it easy for us to coordinate the trip as planned. At the end of the day, I could see the happy faces of the students who got a chance to escape from the daily routine of their indoor classes and to learn from an outdoor and practical experience that I hope will definitely expand the horizon of their minds.
